

Making a New Home in Senior Living

There really is no place like home. You can surround yourself with items that are most important to you, whether it be photo memories, or a piece of furniture passed down in your family. You can host family and friends for meals or game nights. You can curl up in your favorite spot to read or watch your favorite show. This is the place where you relax and are able to be your most true self.

When it comes to making the move to senior living, though, floor plans aren't always high on the list of priorities. But maybe they should be. Considering most of our time is spent in our homes, you want to make sure that your new residence is one that fits your needs.

Considerations to Make When Choosing Floor Plans for Senior Living

While going through the decision-making process of choosing the floor plan you want to move in to, we recommend thinking about what your needs are when it comes to your place of residence. There are three points to be especially mindful of when considering what you need in a floor plan: your lifestyle, the space you need for your belongings and your budget.

- Lifestyle: Are you someone who likes to cook? Or maybe you have a hobby like crafting that requires a little extra space. Your hobbies and lifestyle are important to keep in mind when looking at floor plan options. After all, this is going to be your new home, so you want a space that will check all the boxes when it comes to your interests.
- Space: The actual square footage of your new home is important to keep in mind. Whether you thrive in less space with less fuss or enjoy room to move around, you want to make sure your residence is the right size for you to live comfortably.
- Budget: To make sure you are financially comfortable, our sales counselors are available to assist you in your decision of your new home. Together, we can research and evaluate your options when it comes to balancing your
